

SENATE TURNS DOWN PRINT PAPER ITEM

Refuses to Put Publishers' Supplies Under Executive Control.

That the United States Senate is opposed to any censorship of the press was again demonstrated yesterday. Senator Mark Smith, of Arizona, attempted to have new print paper included as one of the "necessaries," over which the President will have control in the food bill.

"I am not willing," said Senator Borah, of Idaho, "to place the newspapers of this country in such an attitude that they must go to the government to get the paper they print. To my mind this amounts to a vicious censorship."

The Senate did not even take a rollcall on the subject. By a viva voce, the body rejected the amendment by a loud "no."

Senator Borah made his statement to Senator Chamberlain, who was managing the food bill.

"I am inclined to agree with you," said Senator Chamberlain.

"I am aware that monopoly has run riot, and that it is never so important as at the present time. But I am not willing to make every newspaper a newspaper to the government for its paper," said Borah.

"If the government has the power over necessities set forth in this bill, why could it not refuse to allow a newspaper to have the print paper?" inquired Senator Sherman.

"Well, you must trust somebody," Senator Smith said. "This is war time. We were listening to the song of the birds when the guns thundered."

Despite this argument, the Senate would not agree with the Senator from Arizona.
